

WHY IT'S IMPORTANT TO STAGE A VACANT HOME

People Don't Buy Houses, They Buy Homes

- ☞ The number one reason a buyer purchases a home is because it “felt home.” It was warm, inviting and the buyer made an emotional connection with the home. When have you ever heard of an empty room described as warm and inviting?

Without Furniture, There Is No Frame Of Reference

- ☞ How big is the room? Without furniture it's incredibly difficult to tell the scale and size of a room. What is this room for? Many times a buyer can't tell the living from the dining space. Don't keep them guessing, because it only distracts them from considering the home as a purchase.

When the buyer does not have answers to their questions they walk away.

When A Room Is Kept Empty, Buyers Focus On Negative Details

- ☞ It's so much easier to notice that crack in the wall, or the chip in the tile when there is nothing else to look at. Home Staging capitalizes on the positive aspects of a home, while de-emphasizing negative aspects in order to show a home that will make an emotional connection with buyers.

Only 10% of Home Buyers Can Actually Visualize the Potential of Home

- ☞ Nine out of every ten people walking in your home have no imagination of the wonderful possibilities your home has to offer them. They just can't picture it. Don't let a simple thing like no furniture or limited furniture ruin your sale.

Vacant Home Rate Is At All-Time High

- ☞ According to the Census Bureau the vacancy rate of homes is at the highest level they have ever seen since they started tracking it 40 years ago! You want your home to show better than the empty homes on the market that may continue to stay there without considerable price decreases.
